V1- Reading Comprehension& Summary Making ( 40 Marks )*Read the following passage carefully, then answer the questions below:

40

Many people live their lives based on emotions. There are both negative and positive emotions that govern our minds. Positive emotions are those that bring happiness to us as well as to all those around us as love and kindness. Negative emotions are those that make us restless and unhappy and also force us to spread the same to everyone around like hate and anger. Anger however, is perhaps the most destructive of all emotions. It is an emotion which is secondary to some other emotions that you are feeling like fear, guilt or relief. So the parent who shouts at her kid, who gets home late, is using anger as a way of displacing fear.

Anger has many causes. Anger is a natural response to threats caused by both external and internal events. Examples of external triggers are a traffic jam, the neighbor's loud stereo or when someone is wrongly accused of a crime. Internal examples include worrying or about personal problems .But anger may have other causes as well. Changes in hormone levels seem to cause anger too, and inheritance plays a part, as does our upbringing. The more we are raised in anger, the more anger we are likely to feel later in our lives.

Most researchers think that anger leads to an increased risk of heart attack, but studies show that keeping anger inside oneself is bad for you too. Women who constantly control their anger, for example, show a higher death rate than those that don't. When people suppress their anger, one study suggests, this is more damaging to the woman's health than the man's. So it seems that while frequent anger is bad for you, the suppression of anger is worse. Some scientists suggest that using anger consciously is a good thing, provided it is not too extreme or out of control, but others are convinced that anger could be one of the main factors controlling our emotional and physical health.

There are many ways to help you overcome anger. When you feel anger arising in you, start breathing deeply and slowly several times. Drinking some water has a calming effect on the body too. Try to be more patient and more tolerant towards people even those you don't like. You shouldn't take everything seriously .It is not worth it. Positive thinking makes it easier to disregard remarks and behavior that otherwise could cause anger.

A-Choose the correct answer from a, b, c and d: ( 4 X 4½ = 18 )

24. The underlined word "displacing" in the 1st paragraph is closest in meaning to
- applying
  - inserting

- studies
  - women
  - researchers
  - people
27. Which of the following is NOT mentioned as a fact about anger?
- Anger definitely leads to suicide.
  - Anger can be controlled in a variety of ways.
  - Our physical well-being can be negatively affected by anger
  - Using anger consciously is advantageous

VI-Reading Comprehension& summary making ( 40 )

-Read the following passage carefully, then answer the questions below:

One hundred years ago, the invention of automobile was viewed as a great step forward. Today car engines are not always considered such wonderful machines. In fact, they are the cause of a number of social and environmental problems worldwide. The most serious of these is air pollution. In fact, burning gasoline and diesel fuel in motor vehicles releases many chemicals into the atmosphere, including large amounts of CO<sub>2</sub>. Higher levels CO<sub>2</sub> in the atmosphere have led to warmer weather and climate change around the world.

One way to limit the amount of CO<sub>2</sub> produced by cars and trucks is to encourage people to use motor vehicles less, this will mean making major changes in transportation systems. In most parts of the United States, for examples, the only way to get around is by car. It is often dangerous or impossible to travel on foot or by bicycle, and there may be few or no buses or trains. In some US cities, public transportation does exist, but few people use it because it is often unattractive, inconvenient, and expensive.

Pollution from motor vehicles can be further reduced by changing the engines of motor vehicles so they use different fuels. There are several nonpolluting fuels already available. One is natural gas. Several large cities in the United States are setting an example by replacing older buses and vans with vehicles that burn natural gas. Electricity is another important source of energy that pollutes less. Electric vehicles are becoming more efficient as the technology improves.

Of all the new fuels, hydrogen is the clean fuel that scientists believe could be the fuel of the future. Hydrogen fuel cells create energy by combining hydrogen with oxygen. They do not release any pollution into the atmosphere – only water. A small amount of energy is required to produce the hydrogen, but this energy could be supplied by pollution – free solar or wind power. Though the first fuel cells, invented in the 1980s, were very large and quite expensive, the newest fuel cells are much smaller and less expensive. Hydrogen – powered vehicles could soon be sold at reasonable prices if governments and automobile manufactures invest in the development of this nonpolluting technology.

VI- Reading Comprehension & Summary Making (40 Marks)

Read the following passage, then answer the questions below:

What do you do when you are hungry? If you're like many people, you probably like something sweet for a snack. A tree is like a hungry child because it needs food to grow, and it prefers sugar. It's not exactly the same sugar we find in candy and cookies, but it is a special kind called glucose that makes trees grow.

You might be thinking, 'How does a tree eat the food (sugar)? Trees don't have mouths. They have roots to take in water and minerals, but they don't get food through their roots either. Trees make their sugar in their leaves. The sugar is sent from the leaves into the branches, trunk, and roots. When a tree "eats," it moves sugar from the leaves to all its other parts. When your mom makes cookies, she uses a recipe with certain ingredients. When a tree grows, it uses its own recipe.

Trees grow mostly in spring and summer, where there is a lot of sunshine every day. When fall begins, the days get shorter and there is less sun. This warns the tree to begin getting ready for winter. The leaves begin to turn red, orange, gold, and brown, because with less sunlight and water, the green chlorophyll in the cells of the plant begins to disappear. As winter begins to approach, the tree uses the food it stored during spring and summer, and goes into a rest period.

We plant trees primarily for their beauty and to provide shade, but they do create many other benefits. Trees can sooth and relax us and help us connect to nature and our surroundings. The colour green is a calming, cool colour that helps our eyes quickly recover from strain. By planting and caring for trees, we help improve our surrounding and reduce pollution. Trees absorb harmful gasses from the air and release oxygen.

People cut down trees to make furniture, equipment and paper, but overcutting of trees makes our environment dirty and deserted. Without trees, we could potentially suffer because of lack of oxygen and there would be no life.

Read the following passage carefully , then answer the questions below:

Malnutrition is a dietary condition caused by a deficiency or excess of one or more essential nutrients in the diet. Malnutrition is characterized by a wide range of health problems. They include extreme weight loss, weakened resistance to infection, and weakening of brainpower. Severe cases of malnutrition can lead to death .

For one thing, deficiency diseases result from inadequate intake of the major nutrients. These deficiencies can result from eating foods that lack critical vitamins and minerals, from a lack of variety of foods, or from simply not having enough food. When the body is not given enough of any one of the essential nutrients over a period of time, it becomes weak and less able to fight infection. The brain may become inactive and react slowly. The body taps its stored fat for energy, and muscle is broken down to use for energy. Eventually the body fades away, the heart ceases to pump properly, and death occurs.

Although malnutrition is more commonly associated with dietary deficiencies, it also can develop in cases where people have enough food to eat, but they choose foods low in essential nutrients. This is the more common form of malnutrition in most developed countries. When poor food choices are made, a person may be getting an adequate amount of calories each day, yet still be starving. For example, low intake of calcium is directly related to poor quality bones and increased breakage risk, especially in the elderly.

A fatty diet may also lead to other nutritional problems. Obesity is one of these problems. It is the condition of having too much body fat. It has been linked to life-threatening diseases including diabetes, heart problems, and some forms of cancer. Eating too many salty foods may contribute to high blood pressure.

High blood pressure can lead to strokes, heart attacks, and kidney failure. A diet high in cholesterol and fat, particularly saturated fat, is the primary cause of arthritis, which results when fat and cholesterol deposits build up in the arteries, causing a reduction in blood flow.

VI- Reading Comprehension (40 Marks )*Read the following passage carefully, then answer the questions below:

The internet has developed the way we do our shopping. Businessmen regard the internet as a modern effective tool for business transactions. Online shopping is the act of purchasing products or services over the internet. If we compare online shopping with traditional shopping, we can find that Online shopping, particularly during a festive holiday season, reduces the need to wait in long lines or search from store to store for a particular item. Conventional shopping entails leaving the home to jostle with the traffic, crowds and long queues. There is the convenience of being able to shop 24 hours a day for any type of product imaginable.

The ability to shop from home allows many people (the elderly, the disabled, young mothers) to still purchase the products and services they need. Then it is more comfortable. You can find and buy products from all over the world. Sometimes the goods are cheaper as the seller does not have to pay the costs of running a shop. You have the opportunity to compare as many products and prices as you want without having to spend the time and money to travel between several different shops.

Like in other forms of business, there are disadvantages too. First, online shoppers face fraud and security concerns. It has been widely criticized for being very insecure. Even with the latest security ware, hackers still manage to find a way to steal your data. Second, online shopping puts you at a disadvantage. You can't see and feel first hand or try for size your purchase. You take the word of the description of the product which is usually cleverly crafted by online stores to make it sound appealing to people. Third, there is no means for you to check for full cost or hidden cost until something unexpected happens. Online shops do not always list the other additional charges. Last, online shopping doesn't provide the pleasure of accompanying your friends and spend some time with them and listen to their opinions about what you are going to buy.

In summary, the main advantages of shopping online are convenience and cost savings, while the main disadvantages are security risks and reduced hands-on purchase gratification. In conclusion, to benefit truly from online shopping, one has to be an intelligent experienced internet user as well as a streetwise e-commerce online shopper.

Read the following text, and then answer the questions below :

Do you ever speak with your mouth full of food? Do you forget to cover your mouth with your hand when you sneeze? If you are guilty of these ‘crimes’, then perhaps you should behave in social situations.

The person who teaches these lessons is Mrs. Maggie O’Farrill at the Petite Protocol School, and her students are aged between six and twelve years old. She thinks this is the best time to teach kids. “At this age they are very easy,” O’Farrill says. “When they get older, it’s harder for them to break bad habits. Children at this age want to be polite. You can see that they’re trying.”

Mrs. Maggie instructs the children to speak properly on the phone and walk correctly, as well as telling them about basic table manners. These classes have become popular because parents want well-behaved children but they are too busy to teach manners at home. According to Mrs. Maggie, the mission of the programme is to help children feel confident in a variety of social situations.

So, what do the children actually think of this course? The classes have proven to be popular with most of the children, and their teachers at school have noticed that these youngsters are treating each other with more respect. They also feel the skills they have learnt will be useful to them in the future. Maggie O’Farrill herself believes that such skills can be life-changing. “We’ll have children growing up who value manners. May be we’ll see a change in direction for the better in society. ”

Manners are minor morals. They are the everyday ways which show our respect to other people and facilitate social relations. They make up the moral fabric of our shared lives. Saying please when we’d like something done is a sign of being so polite. Besides, thanking people when they do us a service shows that we are so grateful. Likewise, holding a door for the person behind us tells a lot about our character. Turning off our cell phones when we’re in a group setting indicates that we respect our interlocutors. If we fail to teach these everyday habits to our children, we will not prepare them to be socially competent and likeable people. When society in general fails to teach manners to the young, it paves the way for the gross violations of civility behavioural rules.

\ Read the following passage carefully, and then answer the questions below*

In the past, internet websites only provided information for users to read. In this way, websites were like newspapers. All of the communication went in only one direction: from the website to the users.

Now, the internet has become more interactive than it was in the past. Billions of people around the world are using social networking sites to connect with one another. In the United States, the most commonly used site is Facebook. In fact, Facebook is one of the most popular social networking sites in the world. A Harvard University student started Facebook in 2004, and it spread to more than 400 million users in just a few years.

Social networking sites allow users to communicate and socilaize through voice and video chats, instant messaging, and e-mails. People can share photographs of themselves and of others. They can tell friends what they are doing at any moment and keep in touch. They can post a link to a site with their favourite songs or bands. They can join groups with others who share their interests. Many people post videos of themselves on sites like YouTube. Other users can comment on these videos.

Social networking sites are of great importance for both academics and businessmen. They allow academics to create networks to share their research and ideas. For many companies, social networking sites are considered an ideal marketing tool as they are free to use and can reach customers of all ages anywhere in the world.

Everything that is an advantage about social networking can also be a disadvantage. For example, social networks can contain inappropriate sites or videos that shouldn't be seen by teenagers. Whether you like it or not, the information you post on the Internet is available to almost anyone who is clever enough to access it. Most thieves can make your life a nightmare if they successfully steal your identity. Social networking can also be a big waste of time and money. Moreover, social networking can sell your personal information to big commercial companies. Have you ever posted a comment on Facebook, only to notice advertisements appear with content related to your post?

VI-Reading Comprehension& Summary Making (40M)*Read the following passage and answer the questions below :

Atlantis – this is the name of a civilization said to have been lost under the ocean thousands of years ago. But was Atlantis a real place? Lots of people believe it was. Millions of dollars have been spent by researchers trying to find the lost city.

In fact, there is little reason to believe Atlantis exists. The only record of Atlantis was written by the philosopher Plato. Many people believe he was just writing fiction. No money, pottery, art, language, or people from Atlantis have ever been found. In his writing, Plato described a staggering kingdom: "an island greater in extent than Asia." If there were such a place, there should be some trace of it left.

In April 2004, American Robert Sarmast contended that he had gathered proof that Atlantis sank between Cyprus and Syria. Sarmast used digital imaging technology that was not available to previous explorers. "What we have discovered is a hidden landmass that fits Plato's famed description almost exactly," he said.

He said he located 48 of 50 geographical features mentioned by Plato. One feature is the landmass. It is the same size as the one Plato described. Another feature is a large rectangular plain that could be the location of the capital city. Plato also guessed that the highest mountains of Atlantis might still be above water. If Sarmast is correct, the island of Cyprus might actually be the top mountains of Atlantis!

Angela Henderson, a member of Sarmast's team, said that finding Atlantis would be "the single most important archaeological discovery in history." Some scientists, though, do not respect the work of researchers like Sarmast. They think he is just trying to make money. After all, Sarmast is not a scientist. He studied architecture in university.

Some scientists believe that Atlantis was just a real city, but not really an island. They think that the people who translated Plato's writings made a mistake. The ancient Greek word for "island" is very similar to the word for "coastline." They think that Atlantis was a city on the coast of Cyprus and that a great flood destroyed the city. They don't believe that an enormous island actually disappeared under the ocean.

Will Atlantis ever be found? If Sarmast does not discover the lost city, other explorers will surely continue looking for it. It might actually be good if we never find Atlantis. That way, future generations can continue to enjoy the mystery and wonder about the lost city.

VI- Reading Comprehension ( 130 Marks )

Read the following passage, then answer the questions below:

The first modern electronic computer was built in 1946. Since that time, the computer has developed a lot and started to play a larger part in our lives. There was a quite widespread feeling of worry that computers would take over the world from man one day. Already today, less than forty years later, as computers are reducing more and more of our routine tasks in business and in our personal lives, we are faced with a less dramatic and also a less foreseen problem. People tend to be over-trusting of computers and are not ready to challenge their authority. Indeed, they behave as if they were hardly aware that a computer may act badly.

Obviously, there would be no point in using a computer if you had to check all its answers, but people should also rely on their own knowledge and experience and check the machine when they have the feeling that something has gone wrong. Questioning and routine double checks must continue to be as much a part of good business as they were in pre-computer days. Maybe each computer should come with the following warning: for all the help this computer may provide, it should not be seen as a substitute for fundamental thinking.

It seems hard these days to measure the original size of computers and how small they have become in the last ten years. But within the last five years they have become even smaller and somehow more powerful and faster than ever before. Gone are the days where one had to post a letter and wait a week or more for a response. Long distance phone calls are unnecessary for anyone who has got a computer, a webcam, and a speedy Internet connection. Automobiles are now being manufactured with emergency call features for the convenience and safety of drivers and their passengers, making the days of carrying a map completely unnecessary and improving the peace of mind of any one who must travel the roads alone or at night.

Fortunately. There are many people who work hard to focus on securing our networked technology. Police officers as well as trained hacking and computer programming experts also work to provide safe and secure technology for us. New technology in computer debate has even opened up the world of police investigations, as personal computers, cell phones, and other portable electronic devices can now solve crimes that seem to have little other evidence.

A) Choose the right answer from a, b, c and d : ( 6x10 = 60 )

31- A good title for this passage could be.....

- a) Computers in the Past and Nowadays
- b) Businessmen and their Problems
- c) Daily Routine Work
- d) Old and Modern Inventions

- 32- The underlined word ( they ) in paragraph ( 1 ) refers back to :
- personal lives
  - routine tasks
  - computers
  - people
- 33- The underlined word ( evidence ) in paragraph ( 4 ) means :
- investigations
  - proof
  - device
  - debate
34. In this passage, the writer wants to highlight the role of..... .
- technology and the destruction it causes
  - technology and its disadvantages
  - using modern devices and their side effects
  - computers in our life
35. Modern cars are now manufactured..... .
- without computers
  - without emergency call features
  - for the safety and convenience of people
  - to be used by hackers
36. Anyone with a computer, a webcam and an Internet connection..... .
- can clean up the mess anywhere
  - can not call for directions
  - can communicate with others everywhere
  - is capable of driving his car

B) Answer the following questions: ( 3x10 = 30 )

- 37- Why was man worried since the invention of computers?
There was a quite widespread feeling of worry that computers would take over the world from man one day.
- 38- Who are working hard to provide us with save and secure technology?
Police officers as well as trained hacking and computer programming expert are working hard to provide us with save and secure technology.
39. How can modern technology be helpful in police investigations?
Modern technology can be helpful in police investigations as it helps solve crimes that seem to have little other evidence.

C) Summary Making: ( 40 Marks )

In not less than four sentences of your own, with reference to the second paragraph, mention what the writer recommends those dealing with computers to do.

There's no need to check all the computer's answers when using it. People should use their own knowledge and experience to check the computer when they feel that something has gone wrong. Checking the computer's work is an essential part of good business. In spite of all the help the computer may provide, it should not be seen as a substitute for fundamental thinking.

VII. Translation (40 Marks)

A) With reference to the third paragraph, translate the following into good Arabic: ( 30 Marks )

It seems hard these days to measure the original size of computers and how small they have become in the last ten years. But within the last five years they have become even smaller and somehow more powerful and faster than ever before. Gone are the days where one had to post a letter and wait a week or more for a response.

VI- Reading Comprehension ( 130 Marks )

Read the following passage, then answer the questions below:

The first modern electronic computer was built in 1946. Since that time, the computer has developed a lot and started to play a larger part in our lives. There was a quite widespread feeling of worry that computers would take over the world from man one day. Already today, less than forty years later, as computers are reducing more and more of our routine tasks in business and in our personal lives, we are faced with a less dramatic and also a less foreseen problem. People tend to be over-trusting of computers and are not ready to challenge their authority. Indeed, they behave as if they were hardly aware that a computer may act badly.

Obviously, there would be no point in using a computer if you had to check all its answers, but people should also rely on their own knowledge and experience and check the machine when they have the feeling that something has gone wrong. Questioning and routine double checks must continue to be as much a part of good business as they were in pre-computer days. Maybe each computer should come with the following warning: for all the help this computer may provide, it should not be seen as a substitute for fundamental thinking.

It seems hard these days to measure the original size of computers and how small they have become in the last ten years. But within the last five years they have become even smaller and somehow more powerful and faster than ever before. Gone are the days where one had to post a letter and wait a week or more for a response. Long distance phone calls are unnecessary for anyone who has got a computer, a webcam, and a speedy Internet connection. Automobiles are now being manufactured with emergency call features for the convenience and safety of drivers and their passengers, making the days of carrying a map completely unnecessary and improving the peace of mind of any one who must travel the roads alone or at night.

Fortunately. There are many people who work hard to focus on securing our networked technology. Police officers as well as trained hacking and computer programming experts also work to provide safe and secure technology for us. New technology in computer debate has even opened up the world of police investigations, as personal computers, cell phones, and other portable electronic devices can now solve crimes that seem to have little other evidence.
